RICHMOND, Vermont — Eleven Vermont schools have received national recognition for their energy efficiency efforts.

The sought-after Energy Star designation indicates the schools are in the top 25 percent nationally for energy efficiency and have met tough standards for health, ventilation, comfort and lighting quality.

The 11 schools honored this week represent communities throughout Vermont: Addison Central School, Brattleboro Union High School, Camels Hump Middle School, Champlain Valley Union High School, Clarendon Elementary School, Harwood Union High School, Lake Region Union High School, Mount Mansfield Union High School, Shelburne Community School, Waits River Valley School, and Woodbury Elementary School.

Curt Spalding, regional administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency, says Vermont is the first state to pursue Energy Star ratings for all the schools within its borders.

Hello Rudy,

I am new to the outreach team in Senator Sanders' Burlington office, covering the areas of energy and environment.

We were excited to hear that 11 schools in Vermont received Energy Star designation, and we would like to recognize this achievement.

Do you have a list of the schools and addresses that you could share with me?

Thank you,
Haley
